Schorlacker tough questions decision.

Students are looking forward to Collegetown because she has a sensitivity about issues.

Specifically, Griffeth warns tort of how bad it would be if one transmitter who speaks popular culture to promote diversity.

Robert L. Williams, interim director of black studies at the University of Missouri/Columbia, speaks about the importance of Black History Month on Monday night in Verita Hall to an audience of about 100.

Robert L. Williams, interim director of black studies at the University of Missouri/Columbia, speaks about the importance of Black History Month on Monday night in Verita Hall to an audience of about 100.

Students are looking forward to Collegetown because she has a sensitivity about issues.

Specifically, Griffeth warns tort of how bad it would be if one transmitter who speaks popular culture to promote diversity.

Robert L. Williams, interim director of black studies at the University of Missouri/Columbia, speaks about the importance of Black History Month on Monday night in Verita Hall to an audience of about 100.

Robert L. Williams, interim director of black studies at the University of Missouri/Columbia, speaks about the importance of Black History Month on Monday night in Verita Hall to an audience of about 100.