Brewing up satisfaction

At Jazzman’s Café in the SUB Down Under, coffee is served with a smile.

Heather Weisb Staff Reporter

Teresa Rehm is proving that you don’t have to like coffee to be a barista. Rehm is a Sodexho employee who works at Jazzman’s Café, the coffee shop in the SUB Down Under.

She is in her third year of working for Sodexho, durante the first two years working for the University’s catering service for a year, and last year, she worked at Tuscar Dől Deli.

Rehm said she thought it was ironic when they told her she would be working in the new coffee shop. “I’m not a coffee drinker, and they put me down here,” Rehm said with a laugh. “And I already know what hot water does to coffee, so that’s the irony.”

Rehm said she has liked all the positions she has held at Sodexho, but right now she really enjoys working at the coffee shop. “I like contact with the students, and faculty who come in, and I already knew what hot water does to coffee,” she said.

Rehm said she only joined Sodexho a little over a year ago, but even then, she enjoys talking to any one of the other employees at Jazzman’s. “She’s a very outgoing person, and she’s very supportive when you work with her,” Kenedra said. “She’s a very good team member.”

Before coming to work at Jazzman’s, Rehm worked at C & R Market in LaPlata, Mo., for four years. Her husband then lost his job when the shoe factory closed, and she was able to take care of their three children. “I was very fortunate to be able to do that,” Rehm said. “And after he retired it was, ‘Oh no, I have to go to the real world and work.’” She said she really enjoys her job at the University, however. “She’s a very good team member,” Rehm’s husband was in the Navy during the first 12 years of their marriage, and she was able to go to the real world and work.”

Rehm was the one who trained the other employees at Jazzman’s, and she really knows the aroma of Jazzman’s coffees. “There are a lot of students and faculty who come in, and I already knew what hot water does to coffee,” she said.

Rehm is in her third year of working for Sodexho. Under.
