Pancake City

Sam Murphy

It’s not every day when someone’s job becomes his life, but the general manager Brian Kerby and many of his employees at Pancake City, a 104-seat diner in Kirksville, Mo., have made that transition.

Kerby has been with the restaurant from the beginning, and he has seen the rise of the Pancake City culture.

“Pancake City is about good people who get together and didn’t necessarily know what they were doing in the beginning,” Kerby said. “But they made the right choice and created a place where anybody could feel comfortable and a place of convenience. Granted, we made lots of mistakes in the early years, but we were smart enough to learn from the mistakes and educate.”

Sophomore Mike Malene said he visits Pancake City at least once every other week as a part of the late-night crowd.

“I love the atmosphere,” Malene said. “They have the best people there.”

Since the restaurant opened the restaurant at age 19 years and three months ago, when Chuck Lewellen, a Kirksville native, began 19 years and three months ago, when Chuck Lewellen, a Kirksville native, began.

Lewellen, a Kirksville native, began 19 years and three months ago, when Chuck Lewellen, a Kirksville native, began. Since then, the restaurant has grown from a 35-seat diner to a 104-seat restaurant that serves 311,000 customers a year — 311,000 people who have been a part of the late-night crowd.

“Almost everybody still lives in Kirksville or was something at Pancake City,” Kerby said. “Years ago, we’d have a couple people who worked here then moved away. Now, a lot of the people who work here stay.”

Kerby is very adamant about how a woman who caught the other here; we’ve been a lot of marriages break up, he said. He was going on. It was really crazy.

“Almost everybody still lives in Kirksville or was something at Pancake City,” Kerby said. “Years ago, we’d have a couple people who worked here then moved away. Now, a lot of the people who work here stay.”

Kerby is very adamant about how a woman who caught the other here; we’ve been a lot of marriages break up, he said. He was going on. It was really crazy.

“I love the atmosphere,” Malene said. “They have the best people there.”

Sophomore Mike Malene said he visits Pancake City at least once every other week as a part of the late-night crowd.

“I love the atmosphere,” Malene said. “They have the best people there.”

Sophomore Mike Malene said he visits Pancake City at least once every other week as a part of the late-night crowd.

“I love the atmosphere,” Malene said. “They have the best people there.”

Sophomore Mike Malene said he visits Pancake City at least once every other week as a part of the late-night crowd.

“I love the atmosphere,” Malene said. “They have the best people there.”

Sophomore Mike Malene said he visits Pancake City at least once every other week as a part of the late-night crowd.

“I love the atmosphere,” Malene said. “They have the best people there.”

Sophomore Mike Malene said he visits Pancake City at least once every other week as a part of the late-night crowd.