Men’s rugby battles through losses

The Bulls Rugby team is recovering after enduring some stiff competition over the past few weeks.

Although the Bulls’ losing streak now has reached four games, this stretch of bad luck will improve its quality, senior captain Joe Donley said. “We’ve learned more from these last four losses than we have from some of our biggest wins,” Donley said.

The Bulls traveled to St. Louis, a club team, on Saturday. After a competitive battle, the victorious Bulls compiled a 32-27 victory over the Rams. The win was the Rams’ third loss in a row, dating back to the start of the season.

“I’m excited to see how we do against a club team,” senior teammate Kris Carey said.

“Senior Kevin Hunn said.

Donley said the team is holding its own against more powerful and larger teams. “When we create a schedule, we expect the team to have a shot to walk away with a victory, and we usually do,” he said.

“We’re not used to losing,” he said. “At least we know we could win.”

The team has four straight losses. None of the team’s first four losses have come at the hands of rugby club teams or other university teams.

Hand coach Bill Sexton said when he examines a schedule, he expects the team to have a shot to walk away with a victory, and he expects Nebraska to come away with the victory in Tuesday’s game.

“Although Sexton said he thinks the loss was valuable, the Bulls are confident with their season at home in the Bulldog Invitational on March 31 and April 1 in Kirksville, Mo. “This weekend, the Bullets travel to St. Joseph, Mo. for the Black and Blue Classic on April 4 and 5,” Sexton said. “Our season at home in the Bulldog Invitational is where we are playing to win.”

“Once you give her the ball, she just runs,” Sexton said. “She isn’t afraid of anybody.”

“Senior Helen Russell has a big game front,” Sexton said. “Once you give her the ball, she drives to the goal. She isn’t afraid of anybody.”
