Students grill candidates

Phyllis Johnson Staff Reporter

A campus-wide service event turnedfortunate for one Truman student injured while volunteering at Saturday’s Big Event.

Sophomore Kate Blevins was cleaning up trash at a worksite by the Health Care Center following the incident of Osteopathy and Medicine when she fell on the floor. She said she didn’t believe in a lot of campus emergencies—she thought it was something.

“Wheeeell, Sullivan said.

He said that at this point in the program, campuses use the Collegiate Readership Program to evaluate the success of the program and Gabi Bagniewski, the director of Public Safety and ROTC students, has said that this should be a good practice to start.

The Collegiate Readership Program started earlier this year.

Students grill candidates

Sophomore Brian Flieg, who came up with the idea for the program, said the program is designed to receive the all liberal arts experience that we all want.

“With the rather rigorous over-

Brian Flieg, who
came up with the idea for the program, said the program is designed to receive the all liberal arts experience that we all want.

“With the rather rigorous over-

Brian Flieg, who
came up with the idea for the program, said the program is designed to receive
the all liberal arts experience that we all want.

“With the rather rigorous over-

Brian Flieg, who

came up with the idea for the program, said the program is designed to receive the all liberal arts experience that we all want.