Family relives racing tragedy

Claire Martin's eyes are half closed as she turns her head. She is lost in thought, trying to imagine what it's like in heaven.

"Actually, she's thinking of her brother, Sean Martin," says Mary Martin, Claire's sister. "He's on my mind a lot. I wish some sort of heaven exists. He always had a quick wit. He was always so outgoing, he could always make people laugh."

The year was 1999. Sean was 17 years old, and he was in the hospital for a surgery. He was recovering from an ear surgery as a little boy, he was now going to have surgery on his right ear. He had been through surgery before, but this time was different. They were going to remove his right ear.

"He was having a hard time at first," says Claire. "But then he decided he was going to keep going. He said he was going to play soccer."

Joan Martin relives the story.

"He was excited," says Joan. "He wanted to be able to play soccer again."

Joan Martin is Sean Martin's mother. She is reliving the story.

"I remember when he was in the hospital," says Joan. "He was so excited about being able to play soccer again."

Some young reporter for the local college paper has asked her here to...
