Amnesty protest led to sanctions

Campus protest ruled in violation of Student Conduct Code

When they came to campus in fall, Amnesty International members will take time from raising awareness about global and political issues to raise awareness about University policies.

Amnesty members face charges of violating the Student Conduct Code. They could face fines, loss of membership and the possibility of being expelled from the University. The councils on campus will discuss what a staff council can do to improve communication with the University and help staff members voice their opinions. The staff council will meet with the University president and discuss what the council can do to improve communication with the University and help staff members voice their opinions.