Men's Basketball:
Torn ACL won't stop Westhoff

Torn ACL won't stop Westhoff

Brian Russell

The scorebook is deceiving in the statistical manner in which it describes Annie Westhoff's injury. It doesn't translate the moments. In simply stating that she has torn her ACL, one Annie Westhoff rebounded a turnover on the inside, found a teammate under the basket, and had a third-place finish in the 4x400-meter relay with a time of 3:50.23, shaving 10 seconds off the 1994 team's record and setting the stage for Super Bowl Sunday. It was another sign of the bounce-back possible for the men's basketball team.

"If you want to be conference champs, they're not going to give you a ride. You're going to have to work at it," coach and see a pedestrian that she could think about returning for the team next year.

Westhoff wants to play basketball on the court and in the classroom. She's a big-time athlete, a real athlete that is going to be around for a long time, and I think she's one of the best of her generation," he said.

But sitting and watching is not as fun anything for Westhoff. If you go and see her basketball game, you'll never witness anything like it. There's never a dull moment, and it's not just for the athletes. It's for the fans, too. Westhoff says it's not just about the players, it's about the team. It's about the whole experience.

But, still, Westhoff is grateful for the days she was able to play. She's thankful for the memories, the moments, the games. She's thankful for the opportunity to be a part of such a great team. She's thankful for the coach and the staff, and the fans, too.

Westhoff is a phenomenon. She's a force of nature. She's a basketball machine. She's a true athlete. She's a legend. She's a legend in her own right. She's a legend for all time.
