Candiates’ weaknesses stick out, strengths fade

The year of the Lindt 2004 has just begun, and if you’ve read a newspaper or watched a news show within the past 24 hours, you might be planning your presidential vote this year. This is when politicians and the media start competing for your attention, and one of the most effective strategies is to highlight a candidate’s weaknesses. As a consequence, much of the discussion in the political realm is focused on newspapers and news cable stations has given rise to a phenomenon known as the “war of attrition.”

The King of Pops giveaways to the candiates’ is being held in a massive scale, and given that the candidates who were on the left side of this is too long away, it’s time to move on. The national elections are becoming cocoa. One wonders what this means for the future of the political system. Tuesday, February 23, perhaps, it was a ‘new era’ for the young people who feel themselves marginalized and lost in the political process. But if we are to grow up, we must learn to read the signs and understand the message behind them. It’s time to make a choice and move forward.

Semester looms large in the face of horrific health habits

College is killing me! The history of college students must be a terrible one: I’m sure they all have stories of sleepless nights, endless assignments, and hour-long lectures. It’s no wonder that many students are already feeling burnt out before the semester even begins.

Four years ago, Howard Dean, M.D., made a reputation for himself when he praised the little state that passed legislation every-where to force women to undergo a costly and painful procedure. Now, I’m told, we can’t even imagine what the future will bring. Dean, the man who once said that he wants to see women in the White House, and whose campaign was built on the promise of women’s rights, has now changed his tune. He has endorsed a bill that would prohibit abortion in cases of rape, incest, or when the life of the mother is at risk.

Three months ago, Dean was re-elected as Vermont’s Attorney General, and his re-election campaign was all about his support for pro-choice and women’s rights. Today, however, his campaign is focused on stopping the legislature from passing a bill that would make it illegal for doctors to perform abortions.

It’s time for the voters to speak up and let their voices be heard. If we want to see a future where women have control over their own bodies, we must vote for candidates who support reproductive rights. Let’s not forget that it’s not just a battle for the women’s rights movement; it’s a battle for the future of democracy. The choice is clear: let’s vote for candidates who stand up for women’s rights and against those who would restrict our freedoms.

Dear Editor:

I am writing to the Dean campaign to express my support for women’s rights and reproductive freedom. As a member of the Vermont community, I believe it is crucial that we have a voice in the decision-making process of our state. Your recent decision to support a bill that would restrict women’s access to reproductive services is not acceptable.

I urge you to reconsider your position on this issue and to support legislation that respects women’s autonomy and allows them to make decisions about their own bodies. By doing so, you can help ensure that all Vermonters have equal access to reproductive services and can make informed choices about their health.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. I look forward to hearing your response.

Sincerely,
