Friendship is more than clicking accept

By Katleen Barron

 rhythmic button presses and back-and-forth clicks are not guarantees of anything. A friend is noun meaning “a person with whom you have a feeling of affection.” It can also mean “a person who is close to you.” However, it is important to remember that a friend is not just someone who shares the same interests or has similar hobbies. A friend is someone who will be there for you through thick and thin, even when you make mistakes or have a bad day. It is also important to remember that a friend is not just someone who will accept your requests without question. Instead, it is someone who will think carefully about the requests and decide whether they are appropriate or not. The process of accepting or declining requests is often a difficult one, but it is important to remember that it is the responsibility of the person making the request to respect the decision of the person being asked. It is also important to remember that a friend is not just someone who will accept your requests without question. Instead, it is someone who will think carefully about the requests and decide whether they are appropriate or not. The process of accepting or declining requests is often a difficult one, but it is important to remember that it is the responsibility of the person making the request to respect the decision of the person being asked. It is also important to remember that a friend is not just someone who will accept your requests without question. Instead, it is someone who will think carefully about the requests and decide whether they are appropriate or not. The process of accepting or declining requests is often a difficult one, but it is important to remember that it is the responsibility of the person making the request to respect the decision of the person being asked. 