BY ASHLEY JOST Staff Reporter

After working in food management for 34 years, Sodexo director Dennis Markeson is retiring at the end of the month. Markeson is a well-respected figure in the food service industry.

"He's been a real leader in the industry," said a colleague of Markeson. "He obviously understands the industry," said a director from another company. "But he's also a good guy to work with."

Rector said he worked closely with Markeson for more than five years. "He has several important projects, such as the construction of the Student Union and the new dining hall, Rilla Hyd and the planning to reorganize the Compost Project," said Rector.

"To me, a real strength Dennis has is his communication with students. Through all of his work, he makes students feel for the benefits of Sodexo to succeed, his decisions reflect his belief that every student at Truman can succeed."

"The Markesons said they haven’t made any big retirement plans yet. "We’ll still be involved in Truman," Dennis said. "We’ve seen that despite the fact he’s running a business, that he’s working in the industry, but his life will be as open and as energetic in his retirement as it was when he was working.""

The Markesons said they haven’t made any big retirement plans yet. "We’ll still be involved in Truman," Dennis said. "We’ll have more time to spend with them great-granddaughter, the hope is they will have more time to spend with them great-granddaughter, the hope is they will have more time to spend with them..."

After applying, an interview with faculty and explanations.

"I hope that the person who replaces him will do as great a job as Dennis," said another professor.

The Service Board gives full grants to students in free lunch programs. The Hyppy Feet Running Club received a grant this spring.

"We're losing someone that has a great deal of knowledge here," Doug Davenport said.

"To me, a real strength Dennis has is his communication with students. Through all of his work, he makes students feel for the benefits of Sodexo to succeed, his decisions reflect his belief that every student at Truman can succeed."

"The Markesons said they haven’t made any big retirement plans yet. "We’ll still be involved in Truman," Dennis said. "We’ll have more time to spend with them great-granddaughter, the hope is they will have more time to spend with them..."

He said that while Markeson ander

Rector said this communication line is the University’s most important project.

He said that while Markeson ander

Rector said this communication line is the University’s most important project.

He said that while Markeson ander

Rector said this communication line is the University’s most important project.