A member of the roller hockey team takes a facetime in a game earlier this season. The team is 13-3-1 on the season, thanks in part to offensive prowess. Much of the offense comes from four players: senior forward Scott Whittle, sophomore forward Dan Moody and freshmen defensemen Jim Dougherty and Taran Paterson.

Quartet ignites offense

Dougherty and Truman Patterson combine for an average of 3.5 assists per game. The No. 10 ranked team in the MIAA continues to wreak havoc on the ice.

"The four of us work real well together on the power play because of passing, passing, passing," said Dan Moody. "That's what we like to do, try to work on in practice."

"I never really hit the puck at the goalie with the puck on the penalty kill," said Whittle. "I was just looking for the other one."

"Almost all of my assists last year were on the power play. With one on the net, one guy up high and two down there, we're able to get the puck to where I can get a passing lane open," said Whittle.

"We have probably the best power play unit in the country. We all know how lethal they can be."

"Dane [Moody] would be on one line, and Glenn [Nipper] would be on the other two lines. Guys on the wing," said Patterson. "We can move the puck up to where I can get a passing lane open."

"Dougherty said having some consistency on the team really goes a long way because it makes coming to practice easier. As a result, better chemistry goes on there."
