Art exhibit features race, politics

"This show is not only about art but also about something that all campus might be interested in. This art exhibit is very provocative and challenging, but also visually exciting and entertaining."

Located in Columbia, the Central Missouri Food Bank distributes food to 32 counties in Missouri. Senior Lindsey Tauer said that working alongside the Central Missouri Food Bank has been one of her most memorable experiences from all over campus. She said that the central Missouri Food Bank helps many people who don't have a steady income, and that donations from other groups are crucial.

Tauer said, "There's a lot of people below the poverty line, that really can't feed themselves without donations," Tauer said. "We really stressed that with $1, you can buy 15 meals or 20 pounds of food, so donations can really stretch." Tauer added that the students were passionate about the need for donations.

"We always give the proceeds to a charity, though the charity changes from year to year. This year it is a haunted house to charity is not a new occurrence, but working alongside the AKL and the SERVE Center is. "AKL has been doing the haunted house for over 20 years," Broderick said. "We always give the proceeds to a charity, although we change charities from year to year. Last year our proceeds went to the Final Food Bank, and the SERVE Center is doing the same thing, but working alongside the AKL.

The final event of the Big Week was the Prism Dance, a regular appearance at which is very successful. The Prism Dance is an annual event that showcases the talents of students and faculty across Truman, including University Sangar, Missouri, and the Central Missouri Food Bank. Kroeger and Alpha Kappa Lambda were one of the biggest contributors to the Big Week of Giving. "I think we probably couldn't have done it without them," Kroeger said. "A lot of other groups were involved, but Alpha Kappa Lambda was the only one of them is involved on the committee with Big Week. They've been so helpful."
