Tom Thumb showcases art

Truman hosts Appeals Court

Student Senate plans to restart glass recycling program

---

Student Senate plans to restart glass recycling program

The Missouri Student Senate on Wednesday night voted to restart a glass recycling program at Truman State University. This brings back a program that was put on hold about six years ago.

The program was put on hold after the Missouri City of Kirksville and Veolia Environmental Services had no market for glass recycling.

Utter said Ripple Glass uses the glass to make small cullets that can be sold to other companies to make a variety of products, including drinking glasses, lamp parts, beer bottles and insulators.

Utter said Ripple Glass uses the glass to make small cullets that can be sold to other companies to make a variety of products, including drinking glasses, lamp parts, beer bottles and insulators.

Utter said Ripple Glass uses the glass to make small cullets that can be sold to other companies to make a variety of products, including drinking glasses, lamp parts, beer bottles and insulators.

Utter said Ripple Glass uses the glass to make small cullets that can be sold to other companies to make a variety of products, including drinking glasses, lamp parts, beer bottles and insulators.

Utter said Ripple Glass uses the glass to make small cullets that can be sold to other companies to make a variety of products, including drinking glasses, lamp parts, beer bottles and insulators.