Continued from Page 1

students to discuss the noise problem, which could be people being too loud in their room or a group walking down the hall without considering the quiet hours policy. He said the source of the noise could be environmental, like doors that could be environmental, like doors that

“Through our new efforts, we want to make sure that students don’t just keep it up with us,” Burden said. “They are welcome to talk to names on their own or involve (the staff).” Burden said he encourages students to knock down loudly and if they can be quiet. He said a good rule to remember is to knock a few minutes down the noise levels must be added to it.

“It is a good example of people just be-

“Quiet hours still start at 10:30 p.m. on Sunday through Thursday,” said Burden. “We do not change the policy,” Gardner said. He said if a situation does not improve, the student should check with one of the residence life advisors or the staff’s policy.

“Through our new efforts, we want to make sure that students don’t just keep it up with us,” Burden said. “They are welcome to talk to names on their own or involve (the staff).” Burden said he encourages students to knock down loudly and if they can be quiet. He said a good rule to remember is to knock a few minutes down the noise levels must be added to it.

“It is a good example of people just be-

“Quiet hours still start at 10:30 p.m. on Sunday through Thursday,” said Burden. “We do not change the policy,” Gardner said. He said if a situation does not improve, the student should check with one of the residence life advisors or the staff’s policy.

“Through our new efforts, we want to make sure that students don’t just keep it up with us,” Burden said. “They are welcome to talk to names on their own or involve (the staff).” Burden said he encourages students to knock down loudly and if they can be quiet. He said a good rule to remember is to knock a few minutes down the noise levels must be added to it.

“It is a good example of people just be-

“Quiet hours still start at 10:30 p.m. on Sunday through Thursday,” said Burden. “We do not change the policy,” Gardner said. He said if a situation does not improve, the student should check with one of the residence life advisors or the staff’s policy.

“Through our new efforts, we want to make sure that students don’t just keep it up with us,” Burden said. “They are welcome to talk to names on their own or involve (the staff).” Burden said he encourages students to knock down loudly and if they can be quiet. He said a good rule to remember is to knock a few minutes down the noise levels must be added to it.

“It is a good example of people just be-

“Quiet hours still start at 10:30 p.m. on Sunday through Thursday,” said Burden. “We do not change the policy,” Gardner said. He said if a situation does not improve, the student should check with one of the residence life advisors or the staff’s policy.

“Through our new efforts, we want to make sure that students don’t just keep it up with us,” Burden said. “They are welcome to talk to names on their own or involve (the staff).” Burden said he encourages students to knock down loudly and if they can be quiet. He said a good rule to remember is to knock a few minutes down the noise levels must be added to it.

“It is a good example of people just be-

“Quiet hours still start at 10:30 p.m. on Sunday through Thursday,” said Burden. “We do not change the policy,” Gardner said. He said if a situation does not improve, the student should check with one of the residence life advisors or the staff’s policy.

“Through our new efforts, we want to make sure that students don’t just keep it up with us,” Burden said. “They are welcome to talk to names on their own or involve (the staff).” Burden said he encourages students to knock down loudly and if they can be quiet. He said a good rule to remember is to knock a few minutes down the noise levels must be added to it.

“It is a good example of people just be-

“Quiet hours still start at 10:30 p.m. on Sunday through Thursday,” said Burden. “We do not change the policy,” Gardner said. He said if a situation does not improve, the student should check with one of the residence life advisors or the staff’s policy.

“Through our new efforts, we want to make sure that students don’t just keep it up with us,” Burden said. “They are welcome to talk to names on their own or involve (the staff).” Burden said he encourages students to knock down loudly and if they can be quiet. He said a good rule to remember is to knock a few minutes down the noise levels must be added to it.

“It is a good example of people just be-

“Quiet hours still start at 10:30 p.m. on Sunday through Thursday,” said Burden. “We do not change the policy,” Gardner said. He said if a situation does not improve, the student should check with one of the residence life advisors or the staff’s policy.

“Through our new efforts, we want to make sure that students don’t just keep it up with us,” Burden said. “They are welcome to talk to names on their own or involve (the staff).” Burden said he encourages students to knock down loudly and if they can be quiet. He said a good rule to remember is to knock a few minutes down the noise levels must be added to it.

“It is a good example of people just be-

“Quiet hours still start at 10:30 p.m. on Sunday through Thursday,” said Burden. “We do not change the policy,” Gardner said. He said if a situation does not improve, the student should check with one of the residence life advisors or the staff’s policy.

“Through our new efforts, we want to make sure that students don’t just keep it up with us,” Burden said. “They are welcome to talk to names on their own or involve (the staff).” Burden said he encourages students to knock down loudly and if they can be quiet. He said a good rule to remember is to knock a few minutes down the noise levels must be added to it.

“It is a good example of people just be-